

What is Medical Compliance?

By: Jake Hoang

Medical Compliance is the extent to which a person finishes the medication that a doctor tells them to take. Finishing your medication is super important, and if you don't finish it completely, you will get even more sick! I'm here today to tell you why it is important to work with your parents to make sure that you always do what your doctor tells you to do when you're sick, so you can feel better in no time!

It is a big problem that some kids don't finish their medication completely. The first thing that you need to know is that your doctor does not give you this medication "just to be nice". Both your parents and your doctor want the best for you, and they are telling you to take this medication to help you get better!

You and your parents can work together on medical compliance management. This means that you and your parents are both responsible for making sure that you finish all of your medication!

You can't always rely on your parents to remember to give you your medication. They are sometimes too busy and forget. But, if you help remind them every once and awhile, everyone will be happier and healthier! All you have to do is say "Mom, Dad, I need my medication for the day!" It's as easy as that!

Getting the right medication and the right amount of medication is important when you are sick. Lucky for you, your doctor knows exactly what you need. Make sure to always practice medical compliance. If you do, I promise that you will get better faster than you can say "supercalifragilisticexpialidocious"!
